In interviews with Live Action, former Planned Parenthood center managers described in detail what happens during abortions and immediately following in the "products of conception" lab. It's in this lab where abortionists sift through the dismembered body parts of the babies they just killed.

The gruesome process these women described exposes not only the barbarism of abortion, but also that Planned Parenthood isn't aborting "clumps of cells" or "products of conception" – euphemisms the abortion industry often uses to mislead women about how developed their babies are – but children with arms, legs, fingers, faces, and once-beating hearts. The science is clear: these preborn children are growing, developing human beings.

Former Planned Parenthood facility manager Sue Thayer witnessed the abortion process and the aftermath numerous times. She explained to Live Action how after a preborn child was killed and suctioned out of the uterus, the remains would be taken to the "products of conception" lab to be cleaned off then pieced back together to ensure the abortionist got all of the parts out of the mother. Sometimes, there would be a surprise:

"I remember standing there looking at that, and I said, 'Why are there three arms?' You know, and we're looking, and the gal training me said, 'Twins – it was twins.' And I said, you know, 'Do you tell the mom that she had twins?' And she says, 'No, it usually just upsets them.'"

Marianne Anderson, a former Planned Parenthood nurse in Indianapolis, described the utter disrespect abortionists showed to the deceased children in the lab:

"He would sometimes talk to [the aborted child], saying – I'll never forget him saying, 'Now, where's your little arm? I didn't see – I'm missing this arm.' And he would sift through it, trying to find the pieces, make sure he had everything. And then he'd say – I remember him saying, 'Oh, there you are! Now, where's the head and where's this?'... There was another doctor who also visited... He really seemed to kind of get into it. He – I'll never forget the first day he was there – and he goes, 'Look at this – this is so cool!'"

The ghastly process chronicled by these women of abortionists dismembering, poisoning, or starving to death living human beings and then callously sifting through their remains is repeated 887 times a day in Planned Parenthood's facilities across the country.
